This 29.1 mile trail gains a total of 7,358 feet in elevation, which easily places it as one of the more challenging hikes in the bay area. The trailhead is at Mission Peak (Fremont), and the trail ends at Del Valle Regional Park in Livermore to the West. Due to the variability of the microclimates, the temperatures are a rough guesstimate of the averages you would expect to experience during the duration of your hike. If you want to experience the sheer beauty of wildflowers, early spring and late winter are your best bet for visiting. Furthermore, the heat can be tough to bear during the summer months, and shade is not readily available in most places during the trail. It is an exceptional trail for backpacking! So if you're a backpacking enthusiast, this may be right up your alley. Also worth mentioning, you will pass by Murrieta Falls on your way, which is very beautiful.

WARNING: THE SECOND HALF OF THE HIKE IS VERY STEEP, SO PREPARE ACCORDINGLY. ALSO, DO NOT TRY AND FINISH THE HIKE IN ONE DAY. EVEN MOE SEASONED HIKERS USUALLY TAKE UP TO 2 DAYS TO COMPLETE IT.
